LEAGUE OF NATIONS (Indian Bureau)—Improvement Trust bldg, Esplanade—The main objects of the League of Nations, which has its headquarters at Geneva, are to achieve international peace and security, i.e., to prevent future wars by establishing international relations on the basis of justice and honour, and to promote co-operation, material and intellectual, between the nations of the world. Further, the League recognises that universal peace can be established only if it is based on social justice. The League of Nations is a league of states and its business is transacted by representatives of governments which are its members. It does not abolish the principle of national sovereignty and it is not a kind of super-state with an existence above and outside the states which compose it. Its chief purpose is to bring about an agreement in the clashes of national ambitions and interests which might occur from time to time. It affords to those who really wish to come to an agreement a basis of conciliation. But the League is not a panacea and does not by its mere existence ensure, without the continued goodwill of all civilised countries and without the wholehearted and unreserved assent of the peoples, the automatic solution of every difficulty that may arise. Its main weapon is, therefore, the appeal to the public opinion of the world and to the world's respect for justice. The Indian Bureau of the League of Nations has been established in Bombay with the concurrence of the Government of India, which is an original member of the League. As an organic part of the Information Section of the League Secretariat, the Bureau endeavours to interest public opinion in India in the activities of the League through all legitimate channels. The principal League approach to international public opinion is through newspapers, news agencies and independent journalists. As an official information service the Bureau can only state facts and does not attempt to advocate any particular policy or express opinions. It tries to co-operate with educational authorities and institutions in the task of instructing the youth in India in the aims and ideals of the League of Nations; and national societies and organisations—commercial, economic, medical and social—may keep themselves informed of League developments which are of interest to them through the Bureau. The library of the Bureau containing documents and publications of the league Secretariat is at the disposal of those interested in the study of international questions. The League publications, which deal with outstanding world problems relating to economics, finance, commerce, transit, hygiene and other topics, are stocked and sold by the Bureau. Offr in-chge M V Venkateswaran M A, J P
